

THE LIES ABOUT ENTREPRENEURSHIP & STARTUPS

Lie	Reality
All you need is a great idea	Ideas are nothing. Just with an idea you don't have a business. To build a business you need countless hours on human work and iteration. Building a business is so complex ideas change all the time as the business grows.
Product Market Fit is just having 1M ARR	Product Market Fit is a made up concept. It doesn't exist. Reality is you either have a product that solves the problem that people have or you don't. In order to get to the point of having that product you have to ship and iterate, but it's fairly simple
A great product will sell itself	Even the best products need a robust marketing strategy and active sales efforts to reach and convert customers.
Launching an MVP will Validate your Bbusiness Idea	An MVP is just the beginning; it requires continuous iterations and improvements based on user feedback. Expectations that MVP will validate your business make startups die.
You always must follow Lean Startup	Lean principles help reduce waste, but it can also create a lot of fear of execution. Doing things half-heartedly will likely fail.
Being the First in the Market guarantees long-term success	First movers often face significant challenges, including educating the market and high initial costs; later entrants can learn from their mistakes.

THE LIES ABOUT ENTREPRENEURSHIP & STARTUPS

Lie	Reality
Founders need to Know about Everything.	Delegating tasks and focusing on core strengths while building a competent team around you is more effective than trying to do everything yourself
You can Achieve Success without Failure	Failure is part of the journey; learning from mistakes and adapting is key to long-term success.
The more hours you work, the more successful you'll be	Quality and strategic work are more important than sheer quantity; burnout can hinder productivity and decision-making.
Customers will be loyal if your product is good	Customer loyalty often requires ongoing engagement, excellent customer service, and continuous product improvements.
You're either a good entrepreneur or you're not	Entrepreneurship is a continuous learning process. Success comes from constant learning, adapting, and improving.
Being disruptive is inherently good and guarantees success	Disruption can backfire if not executed carefully; it can lead to resistance from customers and competitors.
Offering a free tier will naturally convert users to paying customers	Conversion from free to paid users requires strategic planning, value addition, and sometimes significant time.